"Can you not answer me, Gwen-dolen?" Up from the meadows the soft breezes of a perfect June evening were wafting the faint perfume of the cowslip and a dead horse; and as George W. Simpson and Gwendolen Mahaffy stood near the gate whose decrepit appearance told with more eloquence than could mere words of the deathless passion that enslaved their souls, both felt that a cross in their lives had arrived-a moment had come which would in the misty future that stretched away before them, like one of William M. Everts' letters, he either a bright beacon of hope and joy to look back upon with gladness, or a desolate landmark like the lightening riven trees that one never beholds without a feeling of sadness. Secure in the consciousness of his own merit -- that sterling merit which always the in a strong arm, clear brain, and large feet-and vet with a modest diffider ce concerning his own worth, the young man stood there is the gloaming with a half reluctant est on the back fence expression that legt an added beauty to his pure young face, and made more pleadingly tender the earnest, father is coming up the front steds look with which he regarded the beautiful girl who stood by his side. He had asked her to be his wife-to leave parents, sisters, brothers, and all the endearing influences of a happy, Christian home where two girls are kept, and go out with him into the wide world as a helpmeet and companion. He had told, in fervid sentences, of the great love he bore her-a love that would ever be the guiding star of his life, he said, cheering him when the black clouds of adversity and despair hung heavily in the horizon of his hopes, and without which his whole existence would be one arid, trackless waste on which lay the whited skeletons of Ambition and Hope-ghastly remains of a life whose final wreck was all the more sad because of the happiness which it might have held had Love not flown away with mocking laugh when covering the door-mat, and now that he had finished, was looking down in maiden shyness, while the rosy blushes that chased each other under her dazzling complexion would have told, if anybody could have seen them, of the emotions that were agitating her young soul. But no words came from her lips—those rosy-ripe portals that opened with such languid grace when there was pie in the house-and George began to fear that perhaps he had talked her to sleep. Presently, however, she drew quite close to him, putting her hand in his, and resting her cheek upon his shoulder, she said: "Yes, George, I will marry you."

Turning away to hide his emotion, George muttered in low, piratical tones: "Thank Heaven, I am safe." -From "Grabbed at the Brink," by Murat Halstead.

The famous professional beauty, Mrs. Langtry, is negotiating with Mr. Henry E. Abbey for a dramatic tour in the United States. It is understood Mr. Abbey offers terms substantially identical with Bernhardt's contract. Mrs. Langtry's provincial tour in Great Britain is said to have been very successful, the receipts in some cases exceeding $7,000 weekly. The American reportoire will include "She Stoops to Conquer," "The Unequal Match," and Rosalind in "As You Like It." She has not yet acted the latter part in England.

A curious experiment, according to the Paris newspapers, has recently been made with wine in that city. A current of electricity was passed through a small cask of sour wine, and at the end of a few days the wine was found to be greatly im-
